Description: To be alive is to be at risk. Hegel argued that only by risking one’s life, finding a way to live through risk and make it bearable, does one become a self-conscious subject. Today, at the outset of the Anthropocene, risk is now pervasive at species levels. Rising extinction rates are rewriting philosophies of life and views about the longer and larger meaning of being. You are perhaps aware that Cambridge University hosts a Centre for the Study of Existential Risk, which has brought together physicists, conservation biologists, and analytic philosophers. Their aim is to study the large-scale risks facing human civilization. But what is existential risk, if all beings must by definition risk their existence at every moment? This class will consider how philosophical ontologies and theories of life come to terms with existential risk.

Grading
60% final essay
15% oral presentation
25% class participation

Essay: The essay is a research paper of 20 pages on a topic pertaining to the course. A one-paragraph abstract will be due on March 7.

Oral Presentation: The presentation is a 15 minute overview of the key issues of a chosen text. The structure of presentations should be as follows: choose three keywords from the text and give us definitions and theorizations of these terms. You can discuss the three terms you choose in a variety of contexts, including: how these terms fit overall into our course (in dialogue with previous readings), how the text/term fits overall in the author’s oeuvre, and how the text/term fits in its field. In your presentation, you can choose to focus on close reading of passages, or analysis of the important elements of the argument. Throughout the presentation, you should be raising questions for the class and outlining how you think we can get the most out of this reading.

Statement on Academic Offences: Scholastic offences are taken seriously and students are directed to read the appropriate policy, specifically, the definition of what constitutes a Scholastic Offence, at the following Web site:

Graduate Course Health and Wellness: As part of a successful graduate student experience at Western, we encourage students to make their health and wellness a priority. Western provides several on campus health- related services to help you achieve optimum health and engage in healthy living while pursuing your graduate degree. Information regarding health- and wellness- related services available to students may be found at http://www.health.uwo.ca/.
Students seeking help regarding mental health concerns are advised to speak to someone they feel comfortable confiding in, such as their faculty supervisor, their program director (graduate chair), or other relevant administrators in their unit. Campus mental health resources may be found at http://www.health.uwo.ca/mental_health/resources.html.
