Course Description:
This course examines the contemporary Gothic from the latter half of the 20th century to the present. We will consider novels by Shirley Jackson, J.G. Ballard, Kōji Suzuki, and Toni Morrison, a graphic novel by Charles Burns, stories by Thomas Ligotti, and films like The Ring, Noroi, Rubber Johnny, and The Cabin in the Woods. These texts will be the anchors of our discussion. We will consider how horror and the Gothic interrogate contemporary social, cultural, and personal anxieties; how rapid shifts in technology and architecture have metamorphosed Gothic castles and old monsters into cosmopolitan high-rise living complexes and extreme violence; how ghosts become metaphors for historical trauma; how the nature of reality is, if considered too closely, nihilistically unimaginable and cosmically horrific; how different media operate self-reflexively to ask its audience not only what terrifies us but how we experience that fear. Finally, we will examine why the fear we experience from Gothic and horror fiction is often amusing and commercially successful big entertainment.

Short Essay                                 Value: 15%    Due: Week ____ in class     Length: 4-5 pages

In consultation with me, you will develop a topic that engages with the idea of horror and the gothic. The purpose of this exercise is to guide your thinking toward the experience and interrogation of a popular genre/mode of which so many of us are already familiar. Think of this assignment as a launching pad for thinking about horror and gothic in a scholarly way. While this short essay will not be a research paper, it must be a formal academic treatment of a specific concern. More details to follow.

Mid-Term Test                                 Value: 15%    Length: In Class

This will be held during lecture on _____, and will be 1 hour in length. It will consist of a series of identifications followed by a section of terms/definitions.

Research Paper                                Value: 30%    Due: Week ____ in class     Length: 10-12 pages

You will engage with secondary source material as a means of intervening and offering insight into an established literary debate. Be eccentric and daring! Just be sure that your writing is clear and lucid, your flow of ideas is logical, and you stress the significance of your argument through close reading and critical analysis. More details to follow.
Participation
Regular attendance and involvement in class and seminar discussion is essential. The intensity and thoughtfulness with which you pursue the research paper in consultation with me will also have a bearing on your participation grade.

Late Submissions
Essays are due on the specified date. They are to be handed in at the beginning of class. Late essays will be penalized 3% per day including weekends. Essays submitted more than a week (7 days) late will received a grade of 0/F. If you cannot submit your essay on time due to illness or on compassionate grounds, you will need a letter from a physician or academic councilor of your home faculty indicating that you were ill or unable to attend to your work during the time in question.

NOTE: Students must pass both the term work and the final examination in order to pass the course.
