Teaching Methodology and Expectations of Students

This course is taught using a humanistic education philosophy which focuses on individual development toward the collective potential of humanity. This approach to teaching/learning emphasizes generated knowledge and shared experiences in the classroom; as such, the instructional method for the course is communities of practice (Wenger & Trayner), which includes experiential learning combined with self/team contributions, reflections, and assessments. Accordingly:

- Students are expected to foster a culture of sharing, caring, dignity and respect in all course-related interactions. Students will help each other during whole class and small group engagement activities, including debates, reflection, analysis, discussions, role play and other collaborative experiences.
- Weekly readings and other resources must be read/viewed PRIOR to each class in order to contribute to each student's own and to peers' growth and understanding.
- Attendance and active contribution are mandatory.

Evaluation

Component	Weight	Date/ Deadline
-----------	--------	-------------------

Literature Searches	40%	See Schedule
Leader Development Journal	20%	On-going & Mar. 31 st
Research Presentation &amp; Paper	40%	Mar. 31 st

Evaluation Breakdown:

1. Literature Searches (40%):

Where indicated in the course schedule, each student will: a) choose three publications such as scholarly articles, news stories, or government reports/policies, etc., from 2020– 2025 on the topic of the week; and b) submit a written synopsis (no more than 250 words) on how the article(s) relate(s) to the leadership/human progress topic of the week; and c) deliver a 5-minute presentation to colleagues to expand their knowledge and judgement.

2. Leader Development Journal (20%):

Each week, students will reflect on readings, cases, class discussions, presentations, and consider how these influence personal and professional knowledge, attitudes and beliefs. Your writing framework/approach should refer to Schon’s (1987) reflective practice (SEE ABOVE), considering, in particular, your development in BOTH creative and technical dimensions of leadership and food management.

3. Research Paper and Presentation/Engagement Activity (40%):

In pairs, students will choose a topic in leadership/human progress of interest to them, and will develop a major paper (15 pages of text, 12-font, double-spaced; excluding title page, minimum 20 references ---at least 15 of which scholarly publications--- graphs or other supporting documentation). Papers should be written according to a standard APA 7th edition citation style and general principles of scholarly writing: introduction, body (with appropriate sub-sections) summary, and relevance to practice.

Presentations/class engagement activities to the class will be scheduled during the last week of classes; order of presentation TBA; for 20 minutes with an additional 5 minutes for question and answer.

Written papers are due on the last day of class and will be marked based on coherence, fruitfulness of research, contribution to research and practice, overall content, clarity of writing, and scholarship. Presentations will be evaluated based on effectiveness of presentation, e.g. use of effective visual aids, audience engagement, ability to answer questions, etc.

Some suggested, not mandatory, general areas in leadership/human progress for the major paper follow:

- Ethics (Virtue, duty to others, consequences)
- Giving Voice to Values
- Food Law/Policy
- Arts & Humanities
- Food System Transformation
- World Trade Organization
- Peacekeeping
- Sustainable Development
- Other topic of your choice (must be approved)

In arranging accommodation, instructors will use good judgment and ensure fair treatment for all students. A penalty of 10% will be applied for late work without accommodation.
