DESCRIPTION

Why do social psychologists typically study individuals? Why do universities have separate departments for psychology, anthropology, sociology, and education? Is there such a thing as society? Modern Western thought privileges the individual actor as the principal explanatory unit for understanding society: individuals are said to make independent choices about how to vote, about the kinds of work that they do, about what counts as beautiful, and so on. But this is not the only possible way to understand society. In this course we will examine the historical reasons why Western thought came to understand the individual's relation to society in the way that it has. We will explore how this conception of the individual has led scientists and researchers to look to the mind in order to explain economic, political, and social phenomena. We will also explore several alternatives to individual-based explanations. In doing so, we will venture into educational theory, developmental psychology, feminist epistemology, cultural anthropology, and evolutionary ecology. At the end of the course we will have an understanding of why Western thought has come to be carved up in the particular way that it has, and we will have a firm grounding in a set of ideas about how to put it back together.

TEXTS

A combination of philosophical and scientific (i.e., methodological, research, and review papers/chapters) articles extracted from philosophical and scientific journals, books, textbooks, and anthologies will be made available to students as PDF files on OWL.

OBJECTIVES

Students who successfully complete this course will have a general understanding of contemporary philosophical and scientific approaches to the study of selves and society, and of the historical ideas that gave rise to these approaches. Students will have gained an understanding of the basic methods used in social psychology laboratories for enquiring about how minds negotiate social situations; students will also have gained an understanding of how to interrogate the methods of these studies and the findings that arise from them. By the end of the course, students will have received basic training in reading and interpreting historical texts, and will have developed their skills in critically evaluating proposals on topics that are of interest to them.

REQUIREMENTS

Regular Attendance and Participation 20%

4 Online quizzes 20% (5% each)

Midterm Paper 25% Final Paper 35%

Regular Attendance and participation — An important part of the classes will be dedicated to activities based on having different kinds of oral and written conversations on the texts assigned every week. Students are expected to participate in these activities.

Quizzes — Quizzes will have between 5 and 6 questions that may be either multiple-choice or short-answer questions. Student will take the quizzes during class time and will be allowed to use all the class materials to answer the questions.

Midterm Paper (1000 words) — Students are expected to write a historical paper in which they analyze a classic work from social psychology or a related field. The paper should critically evaluate the study's methods, and outline. This paper is due by Week 7. Submitting the paper after Week 7 will be considered as late work.

Final Paper (3000 words) — Students are expected to write an argumentative paper concerning one position addressed along the course. It is expected that the student argues against the selected position. The paper should have four parts: (i) a short introduction where the main thesis defended by the student is clearly stated, (ii) an explanatory section in which the opposing argument is analyzed, (iii) a discussion section in which the student defends an argument in favour of their thesis, and (iv) a conclusion summing up the results of the argumentation. This paper is due in the last week. Submitting the paper after the last week will be considered as late work.

* Everyone is welcomed and encouraged to contact the instructor for help with any of the assignments.

This option should be used in situations where the student expects to resume academic responsibilities within 48 hours or less.

For 3000-or 4000-level courses in which such a graded assessment is impracticable, the instructor(s) must obtain an exemption from this policy from the Dean and this exemption must be noted on the corresponding course syllabus. In rare instances and at the Dean's discretion, other courses could receive a similar exemption, which also must be noted in the course syllabus.

Instructors will be required to return assignments to students as promptly as possible with reasonable explanations of the instructor's assessment of the assignment.
